How did the Fund perform during the reporting period?

At the start of 2023 we did not believe that high interest rates would tip the economy into a recession; however, we did expect the economy to continue to slow. But to our surprise, economic growth grew robustly in 2023. During the fall of 2023, the Federal Reserve (the Fed) declared the rate hike cycle over and that they had conquered inflation. Bond prices rose, causing rates to fall, leading to a strong risk-on feedback loop, rewarding investors who added beta and momentum to their portfolios. With stock valuations today near where they were before the Fed began their aggressive hikes, equity risk premiums are historically low. As a value manager requiring a margin of safety, we find that difficult to achieve in this environment. Relative fund performance for the reporting period was impacted by the outsized performance of momentum stocks, particularly those involved with Artificial Intelligence (AI). Furthermore, our cautious economic stance led to underperformance relative to stronger than expected economic growth.

We believe that the historic rally over the past six months and investors' singular focus on AI and its future potential has caused many to shift their focus away from the numerous structural issues prevalent in the economy. Accordingly, the Fund remains positioned with a defensive bias. The Fund is currently overweight Consumer Staples and Health Care. The Fund has some equity exposure to copper and agricultural commodities, as well as to areas of the market that we believe will benefit from structural technology growth, along with utilities and infrastructure companies. We believe this blueprint will successfully navigate a market where growth is likely to slow, and inflation is expected to remain volatile and above the Fed's 2% target, and over the long term we believe yields will remain higher for longer.
